The answer to me is one who first looks out for the safety and well being of their students.

Not to enable what the students wants in impulsive desires or unrealistic perceptions or desire of achieving a fantasy.

To of bring them the truth and the reality so they have success, both horse and human.

To bring them to the best they can be without physical or emotional harm within their abilities, and to strive to the maximum possible in any individual.

Teach with truth and honesty, never to hold a student hostage to a teachers own limits or desires.

An ethical teacher will be honest in telling a human student they have reached the limits of their teaching abilities and direct them to the next teacher that can take them to the next level.

Will offer the simple reality that any true success is about the correct work and correct work done over reasonable time.

An ethical teachers will recommend proper supportive aids if need be but never allow the student to fall victim to the belief that shortcuts, gadgets, gizmo's and myths will bring them to the highest level of quality.

An ethical teacher is a listener of the student and the horse, firm if need be but, never a bully.

An ethical teacher knows themselves to also be a student.

An ethical teacher always strives to improve themselves and their abilities.
